

Euphoria trees are large plants found only in Madagascar. The trees are sacred to people of the Moonow village where the trees are the center of. With a trunk stretching to 20 feet tall, it has vines of leaves dangling from the top of the trunk that touch the Earth's surface. Euphoria's take 100 years to grow to adult size and can live for 500 years. The trees reproduce asexually from the falling of a single leaf planting itself onto the soil next to the roots. As one tree falls, another one is produced. The leaves are a deep emerald green lined with very faint gold that is only visible in direct sunlight. There are five naturally surviving trees in the wild. The tree survives on the protection of the villagers and only the rain from the sky.

Euphoria trees are protected due to their ability to heal the wounded. It has the ability to heal the mind or the physical body of any living organism. The way it can be used is only at sunrise and sunset when the sun shines directly on the leaves to where the gold is shown. The receiver of the tree's healing glow has to be standing in the shine of the leaves. The light has to cover the whole organism. This time period only lasts for 30 seconds. The receiver has to experience the full light for the whole time period in order for the effect to occur. However, if the receiver goes to the tree with ill intentions, the tree will not heal them.